Learning Outcomes

Upon completion of the course, students should be able to:

1. give an account of different forms of narrative that have been used in the history of English-language video games,
2. reflect upon and discuss the relationship between video games and their paratexts as well as the role of paratext in narrative, and
3. carry out basic analyses of narrative in video games from historical perspectives.

Content

The course treats narrative and narrative technique in digital games (video and computer games) from English-language contexts, and provides an overview of a historical period, approx. 1970-2020, when digital games have emerged as an important domain of cultural expression and narration. Digital games offer narrative in many different ways, through texts, images, and other modalities, and through the gamer's interaction with gaming systems and game worlds as well as paratexts and related material. Through examples from the history of games and study visits to a historical archive, students encounter a broad range of gaming materials that represent various narrative techniques and modalities.

Instruction is in the form of lectures, seminars, and study visits. The course includes mandatory meetings which can be found in the online schedule and in the study guide.
