Aims

The course covers the role and function of financial markets.

Upon completion of the course, students should:

- understand the principles affecting the demand for insurance against real and financial risks and the benefits of having an insurance contract,
- understand the similarity between real risk pooling and the diversification of financial risks,
- understand the reasons behind market failures in parts of the insurance market, and be able to assess various strategies to correct these failures,
- understand the role and structure of financial markets,
- understand what factors affect the pricing of basic financial instruments, such as bonds and shares, and be able to carry out an assessment of such instruments,
- understand what factors affect the assessment of a corporation listed on the stock market, and be able to carry out such an assessment,
- understand the motivation behind social insurance as well as the interaction of social and private insurance solutions,
- understand the principles behind fund-based pension systems and non-fund-based pension systems, including the problem of long-term financing which affects the latter,
- be able to assess the consequences of various solutions to the problem of financing pension systems, and
- be able to apply their theoretical knowledge in practice as they work together in groups to analyse a selected problem in the field, and present their results in written form.

Course Content

The course begins with a series of lectures on the supply and demand of loan and insurance contracts and how insurance companies which are exposed to competition price their insurance products and set a premium rate. The second part of the lecture series covers the role, function, and structure of financial markets, as well as the pricing of financial contracts on secondhand markets for bonds and shares. This part of the course also addresses corporation assessment and corporate decisions on capital structure and payout policy, as well as how the discount rates are set. The third part of the lecture series covers social insurance. This includes a general discussion of the motivation behind social insurance systems and an in-depth discussion of the financial sustainability of state sponsored pension systems in different countries.

At the end of the course, the students are required to submit a group assignment in the form of a written report on a current issue in the field.
