- with good insight and independence collect and process a complex material,

Content

The course is divided into three modules:

Module 1 Judicial theory, method and the history of jurisprudence 10.5 ECTS cr

Students deepen their legal knowledge by placing law in a historical perspective. Ethical considerations relating to the work of a legal expert are discussed. In addition to the traditional positivist legal method, modern tools are provided. Guest lecturers are invited to contribute current research findings.

Module 2 offers two alternatives:

Module 2, alt. 1: Project Work, 4.5 ECTS cr

Students acquire some work experience and establish professional contacts through practical placement with a company or a public agency, conducting investigative tasks. If possible, the placement should be in the area of their chosen specialisation. Admission to the module requires that students have arranged their own practical placement with a company or public agency

Module 2, alt 2 Elective Judicial Specialisation 4.5 ECTS credits

Students acquire further knowledge in the area of their Bachelor degree project or, in consultation with the course convener, choose to branch out in another area. Course literature is chosen on the basis of the student's pre-knowledge in consultation with the respective teachers.

Module 3: Degree project 15 ECTS cr

Students independently write an academic thesis. Special attention is paid to the ability to structure and analyse research problems and to present results in a clear and considered manner. The independently planned and completed project should comprise:

- formulation of topic, aim and research question related to background, perspective and pre-understanding of literature in the area,
- analytical specification of aim and research question in relation to choice of theory, model, analytical frame, or conceptual schemata,
- delimitation of material and choice of methodological approach,
- collecting, processing and compiling material,
- analysis of material in the light of aim and research questions,
- logical and pedagogical presentation of the investigation and its results in the written form applying standard techniques of reporting (summary, quotation, table, figure) and source and literature referencing (foot notes and list of references).

Students present their degree projects at an open seminar. Each student is responsible for defending their own essays as well as for reviewing another student's essay. Students are also required to participate actively in three additional seminars of this kind. Instruction is in the form of lectures, seminars, exercises and individual study of course literature and project. Supervision is only provided for the duration of the course. Re-registered students are offered additional supervision to the extent permitted by circumstances and available resources.
