Content and Form of Instruction

The course comprises four modules.

Module 1: The Basics of Sociology, 7.5 ECTS cr

The module provides insights into the sociological, including the sociopsychological, way of thinking and an outline of theoretical and empirical research, as well as an introduction to the sociological approach to society and societal problems. Social interplay in daily life, social institutions such as family, work, education and mass communication, is treated. Also treated are issues of inequality, injustice, gender and ethnicity in terms of power structures.

Instruction is in the form of lectures, group work and seminars.

Module 2: Organisation, 7.5 ECTS cr

The aim of the module is that students acquire a basic understanding of the organisation concept in the social sciences. The emphasis is on organising as ongoing formal and informal processes and on different forms of actorship. Complex processes are illustrated through empirical cases. The module also includes components dealing with the emergence of Swedish organisations and institutions and their present organising.

Instruction is in the form of lectures, group work and seminars. An important element is that students work with theories to develop their critical thinking.

Module 3: Paths to Knowledge, 7.5 ECTS cr

The module outlines theory of science, the stages of the research process and the methodological problems associated with sociological and sociopsychological studies. The differences between qualitative and quantitative methods and the ethical issues involved in research are treated. The emphasis is on problematising the basic conditions of knowledge formation (organising knowledge), who 'owns' knowledge in terms of class, ethnicity and gender in an intra-disciplinary perspective. Students also develop tools and skills to retrieve and process information through practical exercises which include ethical considerations.

Instruction is in the form of lectures, group work and seminars.

Module 4: Public Sociology, Research Environment and Practice, 7.5 ECTS cr

Different types of sociological knowledge formation are treated with an emphasis on public sociology in relation to other sociological theories and their relevance in relation to society and power. Students are expected to seek knowledge of a certain phenomenon from practitioners as well as researchers.

Instruction is in the form of lectures, applications, seminars, research-related laboratory work, interviews with researchers and external actors.
