should also be analysed here. Any effect of joint courses should be commented on.

Being a degree project, the course is performed on an individualized basis, with details of the implementation strongly adapted to the respective projects. This worked out very well and was appreciated by the students.

Two of the three students took part in the survey. Both of them only answered the multiple-choice questions and did not contribute any specific comments. This may be attributed to the fact that it was easy for the students to keep close contact with their supervisor in the course of the project and to communicate any comments to them directly.

Suggestions for changes to the next course date.

None.
