should also be analysed here. Any effect of joint courses should be commented on.

Not a perfect run (not least because all three teachers responding to student submissions were struggling to keep up with the feedback schedule due to temporary health issues and/or particularly strenuous workloads) but judging by the spoken face-to-face feedback and highly encouraging and truly grateful post-course correspondence from students, this remains a solid course in terms of content, structure, variety and quality of instruction.

Suggestions for changes to the next course date.

Next challenge: making a smooth learning platform transition from Itslearning to Canvas and adding new or modified features to the course inspired (and enabled) by this move.
