General Information

The Master's programme is designed for students who are aiming for a Master's degree (60 credits or 120 credits) in one of the faculty's social science disciplines:

- History
- Human Geography
- Social Work
- Sociology
- Political Science

The programme involves studies at Master's level in one of the above five subjects. The programme includes mandatory as well as elective courses offering opportunities for specialised or broadened knowledge (see overview attachment and the programme homepage). Each subject offers in-depth courses on its specific issues, theories and methods, while courses in other programme subjects offer a broadening perspective and understanding of social science analysis. The combination of subject enhancement and social science broadening provides a solid basis for making qualified analysis of societal issues and complex problems, thus preparing for professional life as well as further studies. Students develop the scientific knowledge and skills required for further studies and for qualified investigative and analytical jobs, case management, development work and project/unit management. The content of the majors offered are described below.

Studies in history centre on different types of uses of history and issues of cultural heritage. The specialisation gives students in-depth theoretical and methodological knowledge about cultural history in a dynamic international area in which individual and collective forms of action and conceptions provide perspectives on identity and intercultural issues. Students are given a deeper understanding of the role played by historical perspectives in interpretations of our contemporary world and our horizons of expectation. Emphasis is placed on practical placements, project work and mentorship focused on the segment of the labour market that comprises or is connected to the uses of history and cultural heritage, thus providing different job prospects in a relatively broad field that includes identity issues and intercultural perspectives. Students develop skills in independent critical analysis and judgement as well as in independently planning, conducting and presenting a study firmly based in the theory and methods of history.

Studies in human geography focus on the human-society-environment interaction at and between various shell levels: locally, regionally and globally. Human geography offers broad and enhanced knowledge of how material, social and perceived worlds are created and changed in a spatial perspective. Areas treated from different perspectives, such as power, political resource allocation and equity, and in terms of different spatial models of understanding, are globalisation processes, urbanisation and land planning, mobility, culture and identity. Master-level students acquire in-depth knowledge of idea traditions, theories and concepts in the discipline and develop skills in analysing, assessing and independently planning, conducting and presenting a theoretically and methodologically based study in human geography.

Studies in social work centre on independent research and analysis projects. The studies aim to deepen the understanding and analysis of human relations at the individual, group, and society levels. Students also deepen their understanding of human-oriented organisations. Social work mainly focuses on social vulnerability and marginalised groups.

Studies in sociology emphasise independent research and analysis and aim at deepening students' understanding and analysis of human relations at the individual, group, organisation and society level in terms of power as well as the importance of organisations and organising in different situations. The importance of regional and global contexts for people's conditions and quality of life are also considered. The aim of studies in sociology at Master's level is that students acquire specialised knowledge in central sociological areas and develop further abilities to analyse and explore social conditions at different levels.

Studies in political science emphasise political organising and political processes at local, regional and global levels. Students deepen their knowledge of political science concepts and its theoretical tradition and further develop concepts and current issues in international politics, public politics and administration, political theory, policy analysis and the relation between gender and politics. The potentials and limitations of science and its role in politics and society are treated. The aim is that students enhance their ability to understand and analyse politics and political organising. Master-level courses provide specialised knowledge of political science traditions, theories, concepts, methods and methodologies to understand, clarify and analyse power and politics. Students' independent research and investigative and analytical skills are also enhanced in the planning, completing and presenting of a research project firmly based in theory and appropriate method.

Learning Outcomes

The aim of the Master Programme in Social Sciences (SAMAS) is that students develop the ability to undertake independent research and development projects and independent analysis. Master's level studies entail a deepening of knowledge, skills and abilities in relation to previous studies. In addition it should

- further develop students' ability to independently integrate and apply knowledge,
- develop students' ability to handle complex phenomena, issues and situations,
- develop students' capacity for occupations requiring a high degree of independence or for research and development work. (Ch. 1 Sec. 9 of the Higher Education Act 1992:1434)

The Higher Education Ordinance, Annex 2 (1993:100) further stipulates the general requirements for various degree qualifications. This programme allows students to earn both a Master's Degree (60 credits) and a Master's Degree (120 credits).

National Objectives for the Degree of Master of Arts/Science (120 credits):

Knowledge and understanding

For a Degree of Master of Arts/Science (120 credits) students shall

1. demonstrate knowledge and understanding in the main field of study, including both broad knowledge of the field and a considerable degree of specialised knowledge in certain areas of the field as well as insight into current research and development work, and
2. demonstrate specialised methodological knowledge in the main field of study.

Competence and skills

For a Degree of Master of Arts/Science (120 credits) students shall

3. demonstrate the ability to critically and systematically integrate knowledge and analyse, assess and deal with complex phenomena, issues and situations even with limited information,
4. demonstrate the ability to identify and formulate issues critically, independently and creatively as well as to plan and, using appropriate methods, undertake advanced tasks within predetermined time frames and so contribute to the formation of knowledge as well as the ability to evaluate this work,
5. demonstrate the ability in speech and writing both nationally and internationally to report clearly and discuss their conclusions and the knowledge and arguments on which they are based in dialogue with different audiences, and
6. demonstrate the skills required for participation in research and development work or independent employment in some other qualified capacity.

9. demonstrate the ability to identify the personal need for further knowledge and take responsibility for their ongoing learning.

Independent project (degree project)

A requirement for the award of a Degree of Master of Arts/Science (120 credits) is completion of an independent project (degree project) for at least 30 credits in the main field of study. The degree project may comprise less than 30 credits, however no less than 15 credits, if the student has already completed an independent project in the second cycle for at least 15 credits in the main field of study or the equivalent from a programme of study outside Sweden.

National Objectives for Degree of Master of Arts/Science (60 credits)

Programme Structure and Content

The study paths of the different specialisations are based on courses in the main field of study, as well as on optional courses. Several of the specialisations offer opportunities for practical placement and studying abroad. Courses taken at other universities may also be included as specialisation or complementary courses. Course syllabi stipulate the entrance requirements for optional courses and the conditions for practical placement courses. The programme specialisations offer different opportunities for combining specialisation with complementary studies and therefore all students have to plan their study paths carefully, in consultation with the programme's study and career counsellor.

The programme has two possible degree paths: a 60-credit Master's and a 120-credit Master's.

Requirements for the Master's degree (60 credits):

Courses in the main field of study of at least 30 ECTS credits, including a degree project of at least 15 ECTS credits and a course in research methods of 7.5 ECTS credits. At the most 15 of the remaining ECTS credits can be earned at Bachelor's level.

Requirements for the Master's degree (120 credits):

At least 60 ECTS credits of courses in the main field of study (major), including a degree project of at least 30 ECTS credits and a course in research methods of 15 ECTS credits. No more than 30 of the remaining ECTS credits can be earned at Bachelor's level.

Although the programme is largely based on optional courses, a recommended course of study for each major is described in the appended table and on the programme homepage.
